

Mt. Rainier: Mountaineering Day School

© 2021 International Mountain Guides

The Mountaineering Day School (MDS) is an introductory climbing course that teaches skills essential for climbing Mt. Rainier and other alpine climbs. It is designed to prepare participants to climb Mt. Rainier under the direction of International Mountain Guides' professional guide staff. It is not sufficient training to allow you to climb on your own. The MDS is a full day of learning and practicing snow climbing techniques which include ascending and descending steep snow slopes, cramponing, ice axe use, self and team arrest, and roped glacier travel. The school takes place on a snow field generally within an hour's hike from Paradise. We'll spend all day becoming familiar with snow climbing and glacier travel techniques, but will not cover crevasse rescue or other rescue techniques essential for proper team glacier travel. For this reason, we recommend the MDS be taken in conjunction with the 2-day Crevasse Rescue School, a good primer in anchors and crevasse rescue systems. The Advanced Mountaineering Day School is another option, continuing on with more skills the MDS does not address.

Why Choose This Program?

The Mountaineering Day School teaches the essentials of roped team glacier travel. This course is included in the content of most of IMG's climbs on Mt. Rainier, but it is a good review for experienced climbers planning to climb on their own or who feel the need for an additional refresher. The MDS is a hands-on course which allows a substantial amount of time to practice skills before getting on a climb of Rainier or other glaciated peaks.

Itinerary

We begin the day at 8:00 a.m. sharp with a meeting and introductions at Ashford Headquarters. Any rental needs are taken care of at this time. Once preparations are complete we are shuttled up to Paradise where we begin our hike to the training location. This hike usually takes about an hour. Once at the training site, we begin learning general mountaineering techniques including kicking steps up steep snow slopes, descending with the plunge step, cramponing, ice axe techniques, self and team arrest and roped glacier travel. We take a short break for lunch during which we discuss gear and strategies for a successful climb of Rainier or other glaciated peak. After lunch we complete our training by putting together all that we have learned during the day combined with roped glacier travel practice. At end of day we hike down to Paradise for the shuttle back to Ashford. Normal return time is 5:00 p.m.
